

Ryder Lee is the CEO of the Saskatchewan Cattlemen's Association. He grew up on a ranch in southern Saskatchewan that is managed today by his brother, who keeps him up-to-date on the challenges of the day. A graduate of the University of Saskatchewan with an animal science degree, Ryder worked in sales right out of school. He then transitioned into policy work in Ottawa, working for the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

As CEO of the SCA, Ryder is responsible for implementing the organization's mandate to promote and develop the Saskatchewan cattle industry. He enjoys all the different files and ways the association works to meet this mandate.
